MOROCCAN WINE REGIONS

Although Morocco was influenced over the centuries by groups as varied as the Phoenicians, Romans, Arabs and a number of European powers, it was only with the arrival of the French in the mid-19th century that wine production truly began. Morocco produces red, white, rosé and 'gris' wine, but don't expect 'grey' wine for the latter - these are white wines produced from red grapes, particularly Pinot Noir. Other red grape varieties under cultivation include Carignan, Cinsault, Grenache, Syrah, Cabernet Sauvignon and Merlot, with Sauvignon Blanc, Chenin Blanc, Chardonnay, Muscat and Clairette the mainstays of the country's white wines.

We encourage you to try some of the local varieties; a crisp glass of white, rosé or 'gris' by the pool is the perfect addition on a hot day, but if you're curled up by the fireplace in winter only a warming red will do. If it's a special occasion we recommend a glass (or bottle) of Perle du Sud, a locally produced sparkling wine.

LES VINS MAROCAINS

Bien que le Maroc ait été influencé pendant des siècles par les différentes occupations des Phéniciens, Romains, Arabes et différentes puissances Européennes, c'est principalement avec l'arrivée des Français au milieu du 19^e siècle que la production de vin a réellement débuté.

Le Maroc produit aujourd'hui des vins rouges, blancs, rosés et gris. Les cépages les plus utilisés sont pour le vin rouge les Carignan, Cinsault, Grenache, Syrah, Cabernet Sauvignon ou Merlot. Pour les cépages blancs, Sauvignon, Chenin, Chardonnay, Muscat ou Clairette représentent les cépages les plus courants.

Nous vous suggérons d'en essayer différentes sortes: blanc, rosé ou gris seront les bienvenus au bord de la piscine pendant une journée chaude, un verre de vin rouge devant la cheminée pendant une soirée d'hiver, et pour une occasion spéciale, pourquoi pas un verre de vin pétillant du Maroc appelé Perle du Sud.
